

If you use blocks to model numbers you will find that the blocks can be arranged into a variety of different rectangles. Take 12 for example.

Prime numbers can only be arranged into a rectangle that is a single line.

Test this statement to see if it is true and then explain why this is so?

Can you now write your own prime numbers law?

A number is prime if it cannot...